

Foreign Language Consent. In any situation where the participants may not be able to read English, all materials, including the consent form, must be in the native language of the participant to ensure that they understand what they are agreeing to. In these cases, the original English version must be created and then translated into the other language(s). The HSIRB requires that the investigator have a translator (not themselves or a close friend or family member) check the English and foreign language versions to ensure that they match. The translator must then complete an attestation form to verify that the consent forms match. These forms may be found at the HSIRB website or by contacting the Research Compliance Analyst at the GRASP office. The English and translated versions of the consent forms as well as the attestation form must be included in the Cayuse IRB protocol for review.
